

THE FISH WHO COULD FLY: A Tale of Discovery

Ask yourself, "What is real?"
Is it only things you can feel?
A flying fish? A flying eel?
A laughing octopus,
that can't be real?

Can a puppy smile? Can a kitten frown?
Can a giraffe stand on its head, upside down?

Can you do things you think you
can't, and maybe say,
instead, you can?
You can indeed, if you wish.
Just go and ask the flying fish.

The Fish Who Could Fly: A Tale of Discovery is a 32-page, character-driven picture book about a young fish who believes he can truly fly. The book is based on real-life marine animals and has an uplifting message for children that they can do anything they put their minds to if they can believe in themselves. The book also contains pictures and facts of the many marine characters portrayed in the story; thus the readers can identify with the real animals that live in the ocean.

His love of the sea has fueled his passion for writing where, out on the open ocean, your imagination can drift far and wide.

Illustrator: Distinctively stylized illustrator Kevin Cook displayed his gift for art during early childhood, when he decorated everything in sight with his artwork. Kevin attended Sheridan College School of Animation and Design, and has worked in the fields of comics, animation, and graphic and web design through his creative design company, Nivek studios.
